MANAGER'S COMMENTARY

Global equity markets followed through on October's rebound, delivering further gains in November. But a well documented rout in energy markets has had a significant impact on environmental sectors, particularly renewable energy and energy efficiency. The Wilderhill Clean Energy Index lost 7.5% in November, and is down about the same for 2014.

Amidst this turmoil, we see opportunity. Oil prices in the $60s render most US shale oil production and even new oil sands projects uneconomic, and our view is that supply will adjust over the next year and prices will head higher again. It is interesting that renewable energy share prices fell alongside the price of oil because electricity production does not compete directly with oil. And solar in particular continues to enjoy falling costs and improving economics. We added to our solar PV producer positions and several other holdings in the month.

The fund also benefitted in November from another acquisition of one of its holdings: VicWest, whose two businesses in agricultural storage and insulated metal panels will be taken over by the respective leaders in those industries.

FUND PRICE (AS OF NOVEMBER 30, 2014): $10.96 (CLASS A), $11.46 (CLASS F), $12.52 (CLASS I)
