MANAGER'S COMMENTARY

The accelerating fall in the price of oil dominated headlines and market action in December. The price for a barrel of crude has now dropped by more than half in the space of six months — a remarkable fall for such an essential commodity in a non-recessionary environment. Global equity markets did their best to ignore the energy carnage but in the end recorded a small loss for the month. Losses were mitigated for Canadian investors as the loonie lost another 2%, due in part to its close association with commodities, and oil in particular.

For the year, global markets turned in another gain, an impressive performance given the steep climb in the years preceding. As has been the case throughout the post-financial crisis recovery, U.S. markets dramatically outperformed, with U.S. stocks and the U.S. dollar rising while the remaining global markets on average fell. The U.S. stock market now represents nearly 60% of the MSCI World Index, even though the U.S. economy produces 30% of global GDP, is dominated by consumption of the rest of the world's production and has run large trade deficits for more than 40 years consecutively.

Environmental sectors and the Greenchip fund underperformed global indexes for the year and the final quarter, when the fall in the energy complex really accelerated. Greenchip managed to outperform most environmental benchmarks due to careful attention to valuations, which was rewarded with three acquisitions of portfolio companies: Alstom, International Rectifier, and VicWest. After the weakness we saw in the fourth quarter of 2014, we see much better opportunities in our sectors and entered 2015 with the lowest cash position since the inception of the fund.
